It’s important to understand which version of a paper you are being asked for - because in most cases the publisher will only allow you to archive a particular version.

There are 3 versions we are interested in for the purposes of open access:

Pre-print:

The original version submitted to the publisher before peer-review.

Post-print (you may also see this referred to as "author’s final accepted version"):

A version which includes the changes after peer review, but does not include publisher branding or copy editing.

N.B. Some publishers use an online submission system which adds copy-editing and branding in prior to the peer-review stage. In this situation they will usually allow you to update your pre-print version with the peer review changes to make a post-print version - but please contact us if to check if unsure.

Published version:

The final version of the article, as published online or in print by the journal publisher.

Some publishers use different terms to refer to these versions, which can cause confusion. Look for whether they refer to a version before or after the peer-review process, and contact us for advice if unsure.

Picture Credit: http://www.hefce.ac.uk/rsrch/oa/FAQ/#general